

PINCHOT LAUDS PRICE, WHO SHOT HIMSELF

Former Chief Forester Says No
One Can Take Place of His Old Associate.

"There is no one who can take his place," said Gifford Pinchot, today in commenting on the death of Overton W. Price, vice president of the National Conservation Association and former United States Forester, who shot himself at his mother's home, "The Eagle," near Baltimore, N. C., yesterday afternoon.

"We, who knew Overton Price," continued Mr. Pinchot, "know that the tragedy in North Carolina did not represent our friend, but only the disease which he was suffering. Overton was a noble gentleman, one of the truest of friends, a man of the sweetest and highest character, and of distinguished ability.

"No man has a truer friend than Overton Price has been to me.

"When the story of his life's work comes to be written, it will be seen how large and influential a part he took in the forest and conservation movement in America. He was a pioneer in the Forest Service for a dozen years. I have often had occasion to say, and I repeat now, that his efficiency, which the service attained was due more to him than to me.

Master of Organization.

"He was a master of organization and executive detail, but he was far more than that. Overton Price had the constructive scientific imagination in a remarkable degree. He was an originator of plans and policies with the added capacity to put his conceptions into practice.

"His knowledge of machinery of the government in all its branches was unsurpassed in Washington, and he was an expert in legislation relating to forests and other branches of the conservation work.

"In all that he had to do, in the Forest Service, as a member of the committee on department methods, the United States Forestry Service, as secretary, the Inland Waterways Commission, and the National Conservation Association, he was a man of counsel and assistance, and have profited by his more than any one but he and I know.

"As vice president of the National Conservation Association, Overton Price carried the burdens of the work as a volunteer. He returned to the association from his work as a consulting expert more than the amount of his salary each year.

In All Big Work.

"There has been no big piece of work done, in connection with any branch of conservation in Washington, in the last ten years, in which Overton Price has not had a hand. As a public servant he stood alone in his field in intelligence and efficiency.

"His usefulness was as distinguished as his willingness and his capacity to be of use. His loss will be deeply felt, not only by every member of the United States Forestry Service, and of the National Conservation Association, but by many hundreds of others who have known him through his work or through his books.

"The former associate forester had been in ill health for some time, and it was with the idea of recuperating his health that he took the trip to his mother's home in North Carolina.

Born in England.

Price was born in England in 1872. His education was begun in England and continued in the Episcopal High School of Alexandria, Va., from where he went for a special course in forestry to the University of Virginia and to Munich, where he studied two years. He did practical forestry work in Europe for several years before returning to the United States.

He entered the Bureau of Forestry in 1896, and was promoted through successive grades until he became associate forester under Gifford Pinchot. He took a prominent part in the Gifford-Pinchot forestry dispute, being an intimate friend of the chief forester and of former President Roosevelt. He left the Forest Service when Gifford Pinchot was removed and has since been closely identified with the National Conservation Association. Arrangements for the funeral have not been completed, but it is believed that he will be buried near the home of his mother, where he died.

THE FISHERMAN'S GUIDE

Weather Forecast—Fair; slightly cooler tonight and Saturday.
Condition of Potomac—Clear.
Wind—Gentle.
High Tide—11:20 a. m. and 11:50 p. m.
Low Tide—5:25 a. m. and 5:58 p. m.

It is indeed great to influence public opinion. The Fishman Editor feels exceedingly chummy this morning, due to the aforementioned cause. Yesterday afternoon when the friends of the Fishman Editor and the copy desk had gathered, by invitation, three members of the Times staff advanced in a body upon the writer, protesting that they were going to show him up. They further stated that they had been reading this column with growing acrimony for some time, that they believed it to be an utter fake, and furthermore, were going out then and there to fish at some of the places mentioned, to prove the utter fallacy of the dope.

Hide the Fishman. Bill the boomer, and the Fish Editor waved a naughty farewell and left, leaving the editor of the Fishman's Guide. They said that the board would be procured up the street.

The Fishman Editor, a little apprehensive, followed at a discreet distance. Near the Aqueduct Bridge the fisherman three dickered for a boat, borrowed some hand lines, embarked, and set out, a man at each of the two oars and the Fish Editor reclining in the stern, telling about what an oarsman he used to be. "Why," said he, "the paddles we used to use were twice as long as these, and we used to have little chair-carts on the bow of the boat, to roll along in as we rowed."

Having established his thorough knowledge of nautical terms, the lines were rigged. After the cork was placed on the end of the line, the hook above it, and then about four pounds of sinker, the Barge of State was brought to anchor, the ceremony being a trifle summed by the bow anchor line becoming tangled in Hilde's feet, while amidship received the full benefit of both magnificent splashes from the anchor rocks as they were heaved overboard.

About this time two boatloads of fishermen in the vicinity, gazed upon the gathering, whispered briefly, upped anchor, and moved on.

The fishing was a huge success. Bill landed a perch and Hilde's line, the Big Cheese, his voice trembling with pride and excitement as he muttered, "He's a monster!" landed the big anchor, and Hilde caught himself in the thumb, narrowly missing his left ear. The thumb and the ear were more or less in conjunction at the time, entirely due to the presence of the "bait." "He's a monster!" he yelled, as he slipped over the side and floated away. A wild jump from the bow succeeded in tipping the boat, and the Fishman Editor arrived upon the scene in another boat he had considered trouble in quieting the recriminations and civil strife in progress.

About this time the two boats of fishermen who had left the scene drifted past, displayed each a good string of fish, took the editorial craft in tow, and landed at the bridge.

"You go on and fish," said they, "we'll be back in your column against all comers, but dry land for ours."

Boats may be obtained from Trammell Great Falls; Fletcher, Lock Cove; two boatloads. Three Slits; Reynolds, Barker, foot of Third Street; Cumberland, foot of Twenty-sixth Street; Bailey, under Anacostia bridge; Miller, District end of Benning bridge; and Bauer, east end of Benning bridge.

Bait always to be purchased at following boathouses: Reynolds' Bailey's, and Miller's. Also at certain fishing tackle stores.

The following places bear the reputation of being good fishing grounds: (1) The Parlor, a pool above Bolling Rock, straight out from Fletcher's. The water is deep and swift, and the pool bears its name because the fish are known to congregate there. (2) Middle Rock above Chain Bridge.

WILSON ELATED AT MEXICAN SITUATION

President Is Informed Carranza Will Send Envoy to Niagara Falls.

The morning, and provided communications expected from Washington were received, it was to be held.

At American headquarters there was optimism and the belief that substantial progress had been made in the conference so hastily assembled late yesterday.

This was not reflected on the Canadian side, however, among the Mexicans. Agreement on the first point in the plan submitted by the mediators was reached; that a provisional government should be established to succeed General Huerta; that it should be composed of a president and four cabinet members to share equal responsibility, and on a division of opinion a majority vote should rule, leaving the President to cast the deciding vote.

The manner in which this government should be established was not settled, however. This point, which the American delegates had insisted was as important as the character of the man to assume the Presidency, was waived for the time being.

The Mexicans regard it as a matter of possible future discussion. The Americans are understood to have insisted that permitting General Huerta to remain in office would be tantamount to a virtual recognition of the dictator.

In making public the correspondence with the constitutionalists, the mediators indicated clearly that they felt they had waited for a reply from General Carranza as long as their dignity would permit. There is a feeling on the Canadian side that Carranza is toying with the mediators and the United States as well.

Should a reply be received from the first chief of the constitutionalists, it will be given consideration despite the fact that the mediators regard the incident as closed. But among the Mexicans the belief is growing that Carranza may not desire to see an agreement reached here, and that in consequence negotiations with the rebel chief in the United States is playing directly into his hands. The Mexicans are impatient with the constant waiting on Carranza.

The mediators have told the Americans they believe a man of constitutionalist sympathies, though not an active fighter or leader, should be named the provisional president, and that the Mexicans will accept any reasonable selection.

The Americans are understood to have made no objection to names which have been suggested by the mediators, but in expressing their own views have indicated their desire for the strongest constitutionalist representation.

The constitutionalists still hold the key to the situation today. To satisfy Washington the agreement reached here must satisfy Carranza. With representatives of the constitutionalists about the counsel table with the other delegates the mediators believe a settlement might soon be reached. Without Carranza's representatives here, each step taken must be communicated to the rebel chief.

Admission that Carranza has sent an additional note to the mediators was made by Carranzista authority here today. They would not admit, however, the truth of published reports that this note proposes the dispatch of rebels to the Niagara Falls without naming Carranza's condition, as heretofore.

On the contrary, however, a leader of the junta declared emphatically: "Carranza is not going to send delegates to the mediation conference under terms made by the mediators."

Rafael Zubaran, who is Carranza's personal representative, authorized the announcement solely that "Carranza has sent another note to the mediators."

From these two statements it was believed the rebel leader has merely renewed his demand for constitutionalist representation on his own terms.

Club Women Shocked By Scanty Garb In Pageant

CHICAGO, June 12.—Club women, who condemned the alt skirt and airy gown, today expressed themselves as both shocked and amazed at the "Pageant of Apollo and Revels of Daphne," put on by Chicago club women at the Art Institute last night for the entertainment of delegates to the General Federation of Women's Clubs.

The opening scene of the pageant was the stunner. A yellow-haired Apollo, who wore a bit of leopard skin in lieu of trousers, did wild dance with Daphne, who in real life is Miss Patsy Shelley, of Chicago. Daphne's form was sparsely draped in a winding sheet of gauze, and she wore no stockings. Other girl dancers were covered similarly.

Delegates Scored.

"I don't believe in it at all," said Mrs. J. R. Gordon, of Pueblo, Col. "A pageant like that, with such exposure, is wrong, and ought not to be allowed. But I must admit that, scanty as the dancers' clothes were, they were modest compared to those of some of our delegates who looked on."

Why, I saw one big woman there—one of our own delegates, who looked as if she were only half dressed.

Mrs. Herman Hall, of Chicago, member of the committee that arranged the pageant, admitted today that objections were raised at the dress rehearsal to the fact that Miss Shelley and other girl dancers were bare-legged.

"It was suggested that all the girls, except the younger ones, wear stockings and use more drapery," said Mrs. Hall. "But the suggestion was not carried out."

A representative of Major Funkhouser, city morals censor, saw the pageant, but made no effort to censor the costumes.

U. S. Renews Demand for Release of Filipino Boy

Despite repeated protests from this Government against imprisonment of Gregorio Alcaraz, Filipino servant of the American fleet, at Vera Cruz, the State Department was advised today that he is now facing trial by a federal army board at Mexico City.

A representative of American as the American lines at Vera Cruz in search of hovers. For some time thereafter he was missing, and was then located at Mexico City.

The protests by the Brazilian minister here on behalf of the United States Government today renewed its demands for release of the boy.

Mr. Neely's charges were referred to the Judiciary Committee, which will take them up probably at its next meeting to determine what action shall be taken.

The impeachment charges against Judge Dayton go against the House with three impeachment proceedings. Judge Spear, of Georgia, has been under investigation by a subcommittee which is soon to report. Justice Wright of the District Supreme Court, is now the subject of inquiry, and Judge Dayton makes the third judge to be accused recently.

ASKS IMPEACHMENT OF JUDGE DAYTON

Congressman Neely Accuses
West Virginia District Judge on House Floor.

Rising to a question of high privilege, Congressman M. M. Neely of West Virginia today brought charges of impeachment in the House against Judge Alston G. Dayton, of the district court of the Northern district of West Virginia.

Neely demanded an investigation by the Judiciary Committee of his charges that the West Virginia judge had been guilty of "high crimes and misdemeanors."

Neely recited numerous charges against Judge Dayton, among them being:

That he has shown marked favoritism to certain corporations having litigation in his court; that he has conspired to bring about the removal of Judge John G. Jackson, in order that he, Dayton, might succeed him; that he has put on grand and petty juries persons favorable to corporations having litigation in his court; that he has assisted his son, Arthur Dayton, in the preparation of numerous cases tried before him; Judge Dayton, and has abused his power and influence as a judge to further the interests of his son, an attorney.

Charges Against Dayton.

The Neely charges also assert that Judge Dayton has violated the acts of Congress regarding the selection of juries; that he has lent his services as judge to the coal operators of West Virginia by improperly issuing injunctions against miners; that he has been antagonistic to labor; that he publicly denounced a President of the United States from the bench; that he has wrongfully collected from the Government funds not due him; that he has discharged jurors not rendering verdicts suitable to him; that he has openly accused members of the United Mine Workers of America as criminal conspirators; that he is so prejudiced as to unfit him for the duties of judge; and that he is guilty of various acts of personal and judicial misconduct for which he should be impeached.

Referred to Committee.

Mr. Neely's charges were referred to the Judiciary Committee, which will take them up probably at its next meeting to determine what action shall be taken.

The impeachment charges against Judge Dayton go against the House with three impeachment proceedings. Judge Spear, of Georgia, has been under investigation by a subcommittee which is soon to report. Justice Wright of the District Supreme Court, is now the subject of inquiry, and Judge Dayton makes the third judge to be accused recently.

Thomas J. Jones, of Chicago.

President Wilson will make public on Monday the complete list of members of the Federal reserve board.

This list is understood on reliable authority to have been completed with the selection of Thomas J. Jones, of Chicago, as the fifth man. It is believed now that it will stand as follows:

Paul M. Warburg, of New York city; Adolph C. Miller, of San Francisco; W. G. Harding, of Birmingham, Ala.; J. C. Simmons, sr., of St. Louis; Thomas J. Jones, of Chicago.

Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo, Controller of the Currency John Skelton Williams.

The latter two will be ex officio members of the board.

Mr. Jones is a retired lawyer and a former member of the board of trustees of Princeton University. He is a close personal friend of the President, and during Mr. Wilson's term as president of Princeton stood with him in his disputes with the rest of the trustees. During the Presidential campaign and since he took office the President has stayed at the home of Mr. Jones in Chicago.

It is still uncertain as to which of the five men appointed to the board by the President will be chosen as governor of that body. The choice is believed, however, to lie between Mr. Harding and Mr. Jones.
